Element	What you will do and say	Time
Objective and purpose What students will be able to do, and why it matters, in student-friendly words.
Anticipatory set A short hook that focuses attention and connects to prior learning.
Input The new information or skill, in small steps, with key vocabulary.
Modeling Show the skill or a finished example; think aloud through each step.
Check for understanding Quick checks during input and modeling: whiteboards, signals, targeted questions.
Guided practice Students try it with you nearby; give immediate feedback before moving on.
Independent practice Students practice alone once most can succeed with guidance.
Closure Students state or show what they learned; you collect a final check.

Hunter's lesson design is often taught as seven elements; many districts add closure as an eighth. Original Draft My Lesson layout.
